

Conference on the History of British Archaeology at Oxford

Wolfson College, Oxford

10 am Saturday 31 March – 1pm Sunday 1 April 2007

Speakers include

Chris Gosden, Chair of European Archaeology University of Oxford

Tim Murray, La Trobe University Australia

Arthur Macgregor, Department of Antiquities, Ashmolean Museum

(Conference members are invited to supply a suitable caption for this nineteenth century image).

In Britain, the 1860s were years of profound cultural and intellectual change. The growing interest in the British past formed new relationships between archaeologists, anthropologists and other scientific groups. In Oxford, these groups formed new disciplinary interests and commitments, and with them, new structures in teaching, museums and organizational expectations. This multidisciplinary conference aims to address the way in which these various interests contributed to current archaeological practices.

Cost: £15, students, £8 to include Saturday lunch, teas and coffees

For programme and to register please contact megan.price@wolfson.ox.ac.uk
Cheques, with s.a.e payable to Megan Price, Wolfson College Oxford OX2 6UD

The organisers, Megan Price and Susanne Bangert thank the Academic Committee, Wolfson College; and the School of Archaeology, University of Oxford for their support